

Eminence

By Matthew Wood

Description:

Eminence is another exploration to the curvilinear language of my illustrative fascination with the future, where mechanical form takes animated qualities, and the rigid world in which we live is continually encountered with a certain degree of expedition and discovery.

This project is a fictional narrative audio tour that immediately imposes a sense of a futuristic San Francisco within anyone's current location by exploring new ways of telling past yet memorable stories within their actual and current landscape, dwelling on the uses of imagination and ones own personal perceived notions.

The setting for this narrative is the Yerba Buena Park, the SFMOMA, the Martin Luther King Memorial, and the Mascone center. These sites were chosen not only for their individual exceptionality, but their close approximate distance from one another.

My desire is to provoke a new experience and an understanding of altering realities within San Francisco in order to heighten our current awareness of the ever-changing world in which we live. However, the experience of this podcast should porously leave out enough information to allow listeners to create their own personal interpretation and conclusions.
